About myself:

Born in France in the countryside, I early discovered a wide range of physical and sporting activities from horse riding, working in stables to skiing, kayaking, rugby, handball etc... which led me to a wide variety of injuries and therefore to consult osteopaths at an early age (10 years old).

I studied osteopathy in France and in England and learned very different approaches in both countries. I am convinced that constant professional development is the key to helping patients. Therefore, I teach osteopathy at the College of Osteopaths and constantly extend my knowledge by attending courses, workshops and conferences.

I am registered with:
